VISITS FERRY FARM.

Mr. Joseph I. Keefer's Discovery Near Fredericksburg, Va.

In quest of relics, records and reminiscences of Gen. George Washington, Mr. Joseph I. Keefer of this city recently visited Fredericksburg, Va. where he succeeded in locating the old Washington place known as Ferry farm. Here, Mr. Keefer says, Gen. Washington's father lived in 1740, when he moved down from the Epsewasson farm and mill back of Mount Vernon. It was also at Ferry farm that George spent some of his boyhood days.

In a field adjoining the old house he rode a fiery colt which broke a blood vessel, causing its death. At this old water front George used to throw stones across the Rappahannock river and after he had grown to manhood, according to tradition, he also threw a silver dollar across.

The original owner of the land was Mr. William Strothers and George Washington's father, Augustine, purchased a quantity of it from the executors of Strothers' estate. Upon the death of Augustine Washington he left George 2S1 acres, over a square mile of country, comprising one side of the Rappahannock river opposite Fredericksburg.

General Hugh Mercer bought the tract from George Washington's executors about 1801 and proposed to lay the ground out into squares like a town or city, but owing to some misunderstanding the project fell through. The original tract has since been subdivided into several small holdings. The part containing the original house now belongs to a Mr. Carson. The old house was burned down and the foundation stones were used to build the frame structure which is now there. A hundred feet or more away is an original frame building in good state of preservation which was the store and office of Augustine Washington and was used by him to carry on a gen-
